Congratulations!

By participating in the seminar on "A Fulfilling Retirement: Living Your Purpose," you've taken an important step toward exploring, identifying and articulating your purpose in retirement.
As a refresher, here are the highlights from the seminar:

- Retiring well is about more than money – it includes health, family and purpose.
- Knowing your purpose guides your choices – like what you choose to do and with whom you choose to do it.
- Living your purpose contributes to a long, healthy, fulfilling retirement.
- It often takes time, introspection and planning to understand and articulate your purpose.
- Sharing your purpose with your financial advisor can spark ways to structure your financial strategies and support you in living your purpose.

This workbook focuses on how to identify your purpose in a way that is meaningful to your retirement vision and therefore relevant to your financial advisor.

The Four Pillars

Health

Family

Purpose

Finances

Retiring well is about more than money. There are four key pillars that collectively contribute to a fulfilling retirement.

With longer lifespans and more years in retirement, good health means being able to do the things you want. Retirees say that family is their greatest source of satisfaction and support, but they worry about becoming a burden, particularly due to health issues. Those with a strong sense of purpose are happier, healthier and live longer. Their greatest source of purpose is time with loved ones. As for finances, most retirees don't accumulate wealth for wealth's sake, but for sufficient resources to provide security and allow the freedom to live the lives they want.

Learn more about these and other great insights from the Edward Jones and Age Wave research at EdwardJones.com/NewRetirement.

Activity:
My Priorities quiz

Having money for money's sake isn't terribly fulfilling. The Edward Jones "My Priorities Quiz" allows you to zero in on what's most important to you and helps answer the question, "What's the purpose of my money?" As you take (or retake) the quiz, you may notice that the choices offered line up with The Four Pillars.

Purpose: What it is and why it matters

of retirees say purpose is key to a successful retirement[1]

Having a sense of purpose leads to a long, healthy and fulfilling life. First, it reduces the risk of major disabilities and illnesses, including Alzheimer's disease, cancer, heart attack and stroke. And second, it increases the opportunity for better overall health, greater cognitive functioning, higher life satisfaction, increased mobility and functioning, and longer lifespans.[2]

What purpose looks like

Purpose is about bringing meaning to your life, joy to your days and fulfillment in your choices. It's your reason for getting up in the morning. Perhaps it's making a difference through volunteer work, or being creative with painting or music or woodworking, for example. Find your inner joy, and you'll likely find your purpose.

Activity:
Observing others

Whom do you know – or know of – who seems to live in a way that brings them meaning, joy and fulfillment? It may be a family member, friend, colleague, community leader or someone you don't know but see from a distance.

Who comes to mind?	What makes you think of them?

A whole new chapter in life

Most retirees in our research define retirement as a whole new chapter in life. They see themselves as having freedom from many work and family responsibilities and freedom to explore new options and pursue new interests.

One of the things to realize about retirement is the surge of unplanned time – known as time affluence. For many new retirees, it's a surprise.

- People 65+ have an average of 7.4 hours of uncommitted time a day – times 7 days a week. That's 52 hours a week of unstructured time![1]
- And on average, retirees spend 47 of those hours watching TV.[2]

You can write the next chapter of your life, filling those hours with things that matter most to you.

Activity:
Defining your freedom

Retirement can give you freedom from ...

- What are you looking forward to giving up?

Retirement also offers new-found freedom to ...

- What, or whom, are you looking forward to including in your life?
  It may be things or people you enjoy now, or it may be something entirely new that you want to explore.

Start writing your next chapter

Activity 1:
Building your retirement photo album

Today's moments become tomorrow's memories. As you think ahead to how your retirement will look, ask yourself this: "What are the memories, both big and small, that you'll want to look back on – the memories that speak to your heart, and your purpose?" Those memories may fall into any number of categories, such as family and friends, a second career, new hobbies, travel, volunteering, physical fitness, spiritual growth or trying new things.

Draw the images or write the words that define the types of memories you want to create in your retirement. What are you doing and who are you doing it with?

Activity 2:
Exploring the themes

Look back at the photos you put into your album. Do you see any themes emerging that give you a broader perspective?

Here are a few examples:

Photos	Possible themes emerging
Making cookies with the grandkids	Time with family; teaching new skills
Hiking in the national parks	Travel; time with nature; being active
Your foreign exchange student	Discovering new cultures; time with youth; meeting new people

What themes are emerging from the photos you chose? Stretch your thinking to consider all the possibilities.

Activity 3:
Compare albums

If you have a spouse or partner, you can each build a retirement photo album. Then compare them.

- What do you have in common?
- Where do you have different visions for retirement?

This is an important step in writing the next chapter in a way that is fulfilling for both of you. And it is valuable information to share with your financial advisor, who is working to help you live the life you both envision.

Consider your possibilities

Your retirement is full of possibilities. As you write your next chapter, consider the big and little things, the secret wishes, the moments that bring you joy. Now is the time to list them. You can decide later how, or if, they fit into your vision for retirement.

Activity:
Creating your bucket list

Step 1

Make yourself a bucket list. Use a small bucket – one that only holds maybe three or four things. Too many more than that, and you might find you're just trying to check things off without really considering which are the most important to you. Think broadly about what you may want to do, see, try, learn, visit, accomplish, explore, finish, impart, share, understand, teach in your lifetime. List one or more of them.

Priority things on my bucket list ...

Step 2

What you wrote above is your "what" – what you want to do. Now let's look at your "why" – why you want to do it, why it fuels you. Perhaps you wrote that you want to visit Amsterdam," (your what). This may be motivated by a desire to broaden your perspective or to seek adventure (your why).

Look at your bucket list items above. Why are they important to you? What themes emerge in this activity that may be the same as or different from those that arose during the photo album activity?

Planning ahead

Remember the stat that 92% of retirees say purpose is key to a successful retirement?

The activities you've been working through shine a light on your what and your why. The why is your purpose. Sometimes, it helps to say it out loud or look at it on paper to see if the way you express your why feels right.

Activity:
Write it down/talk it out

Think deeply about your life, your values and your purpose. You may want to journal some thoughts or talk with a family member or good friend.

Here are some writing prompts or conversation starters that can support your thinking.

- What do I want people to say about me?
- Whom do I admire – and what is it about them?
- Who is a role model for the person I want to be in retirement?
- What do I want my legacy to be?
- What do I want to bring from my past into my future?
- What new things do I want to bring into my next chapter?
- If I won $10 million, what would I do with it?

A written purpose statement

Much like a written financial strategy keeps you focused on your financial decisions, a written purpose statement keeps you focused on making choices that best serve you.

Here are some examples:

- To serve with humility and gratitude in such a manner that other lives are better because I was part of them.
- To share the joy of music with people I know and people I don't – for fun, for healing and for inspiration.
- To be a lifelong learner.
- To share my skills, experiences and resources to help people achieve more than they thought possible.
- To make a difference for my family, empowering them to live their best possible lives.
- To be a voice for children and animals who cannot speak for themselves.

Activity:
Creating your own purpose statement

Step 1:

Revisit your themes/your why

Go back through this workbook and write down the themes that arose.

A written purpose statement (continued)

Step 2:

Reflect on your values and how they connect with your why

Consider the values that, if they weren't in your life, you'd be a very different person making very different choices. Here is a list of personal values to get you thinking.* It's not exhaustive. Feel free to add your own.

Adventure	Balance	Compassion	Community	Creativity
Fairness	Fun	Generosity	Growth	Justice
Knowledge	Loyalty	Responsibility	Spirituality	Stability

Identify three values that are core to who you are.

Step 3:

Craft your own unique purpose statement

Using the themes and your values from the two previous steps, craft a draft purpose statement. It should not be more than one or two sentences. Ask yourself, "Does this represent who I am? Would others recognize me in it?"

Step 4:

Share your purpose statement with your financial advisor

It doesn't have to be perfect – just enough to demonstrate who you are and what brings meaning to your life and joy to your days. Then, your financial advisor can consider how to make your money work toward a retirement that supports you in living out your purpose.

How your purpose impacts your financial strategy

Your financial strategy is built around the goals you have and the life you lead. Your purpose plays an important role in shaping that strategy because it is, at its heart, the essence of you.

When your money goes to work to empower you in your purpose – in the things that matter to you, in ways that bring you a deep-rooted joy – just imagine the possibilities for your retirement.

Here are some examples of how that might look:

- Roger finds joy in surprising and delighting people – picking up the dinner tab when he's with friends, handing a random $100 to his daughter, paying for the car behind him at the drive-through coffee shop. Of course, he doesn't want to hurt his own financial security. Knowing this, his financial advisor was able to earmark one investment so he can give away anything it earns.

- Dan and Dana find fulfillment in their kids and their church. Their financial strategy was designed to carry them securely through retirement, help with grandkids' education expenses, leave a generous legacy for their kids and support their church now and in their estate.

- Carol is a caregiver for her ailing husband – and right now, that's her purpose. She'd like to carve out some time just for herself but doesn't know where find it. Since she and her husband have been diligent savers, they're ahead on their retirement savings. Her financial advisor may suggest they trim back on saving and repurpose that money for a housekeeper and a periodic relief caregiver so Carol can take some time for herself.

- Julie's family is her purpose, and she loves babysitting her 4-year-old grandson. As he grows more energetic, she has a goal to help him explore the world outside his home – at the zoo, a children's museum, an ice cream parlor. Her financial advisor helped her set up a monthly budget so they could build those memories together.
